The most effective way to contact your legislator is to make a phone call. After that, postcards or emails are about equally effective. Letters, while good, can take longer to reach a legislator's desk as anything enclosed in an envelope often has to go through a security check. Online petitions or group emails carry much less weight than messages coming from individuals. Messages coming from a legislator's constituents will receive more attention than those from non-constituents.

However you choose to communicate, keep your message concise and to the point. If you want to speak your mind on a number of different issues consider sticking to one issue per contact. This may not be absolutely necessary but it can help each issue stand out as a separate and distinct concern.

An email or a postcard can very simply state who you are and whether you approve or oppose a particular piece of legislation. In such a case be sure to mention the specific bill number. For our state legislature, you can find bill numbers and track a bill's progress by going to <https://iga.in.gov/>

Dear Representative XXXX,

As one of your constituents from Monroe County, I am very concerned that <state your issue of concern, and its impact>. Please vote <YES or NO> on HB xxxx. Thank you.

Sincerely,

Phone #; Email address

You can strengthen the impact of your message by explaining how the issue in question affects you personally. And there may be instances where you want to express your concerns in a more general way than by asking for a specific vote on a specific bill.

Dear Senator XXXX,

As a high school student in Bloomington—and one who will be eligible to vote in the November election—I'd like to express my concern over the many issues that affect public schools in Indiana.

Then you can:

- Enumerate the issues
- Say why they are a concern/how they have affected you
- Explain what you'd like to see done

Close your email with a thank-you and your contact information. Often the reply you get will be boilerplate, but don't let that stop you from writing again!
